About the United Nations Global Compact

Launched in 2000, the United Nations Global Compact is both a policy platform and a practical framework for companies that are committed to sustainability and responsible business practices. As a multi-stakeholder leadership initiative, it seeks to align business operations and strategies with ten universally accepted principles in the areas of human rights, labour, environment and anti-corruption, and to catalyze actions in support of broader UN goals. With 8,000 corporate signatories in 145 countries, it is the world's largest voluntary corporate sustainability initiative. www.unglobalcompact.org

“ The Global Compact has helped generate a major shift in corporate mindset in just one decade. Enlightened leaders are making sustainability a core part of business strategy. Today, I ask you to be architects of a better world. What was once a call to the founding members of the United Nations is now a rallying cry to business and civil society leaders everywhere. Help us to respond to the urgency of our global challenges and build a better tomorrow”.

- H.E. Ban Ki-Moon, United Nations Secretary-General

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The United Nations Global Compact Leaders Summit 2013: Architects of a Better World, held in New York on 19-20 September 2013, brought together chief executives with leaders from civil society, Government and the United Nations to unveil the Business Engagement Architecture to align and scale up business action in support of sustainable development priorities. Chaired by UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon, the Leaders Summit provided a platform for 1,200 participants to discuss corporate sustainability strategy at the highest level and produce strategic recommendations and action imperatives for the future of the initiative.

Held every three years, the Leaders Summit is the largest gathering of its kind. The Leaders Summit looked to the vision and aspirations of the first United Nations members in 1945, as they set out to be “architects of a better world”, through the lens of thousands of companies that have become key partners in tackling our world’s most pressing challenges. Now, as the Millennium Development Goals 2015 deadline approaches, Governments and the UN are working to set global priorities for the post-2015 period. The post-2015 era presents a historic opportunity for the international business community to contribute to the attainment of worldwide sustainability and development objectives.

At the Leaders Summit, it was clear that progress has been made within the business community to orient towards sustainability. Participants recognized that the challenge ahead is to transition from incremental progress to transformative impact on markets and societies. By aligning and scaling up corporate sustainability efforts, the Business Engagement Architecture will help business to contribute to global priorities – such as climate change, water, food, women’s empowerment, children’s rights, decent jobs and education – at unprecedented levels. With an emphasis on collaboration and co-investment, the Architecture illustrates the main building blocks necessary to enhance corporate sustainability as an effective contribution to sustainable development, creating value for both business and society. The Leaders Summit set in motion a process to strengthen these building blocks through a comprehensive and collective effort to take corporate sustainability to scale in the post-2015 era.

FRIDAY, 20 SEPTEMBER

Unveiling the Vision

Opening Plenary

The Leaders Summit was opened by UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon. The Opening Plenary was designed to connect participants to the urgent challenges of our time and show that transformation to a better world is possible when we take action, both individually and together. After the Architecture was unveiled by the Secretary-General, speakers elaborated on its components and its potential to help unleash massive business in action in support of sustainable development – now and in the post-2015 era. See page 12.

Interactive CEO Panel

Using an interactive format to exchange views between the audience and the panel of leading CEOs, the session explored the top drivers – both material and moral – for businesses to integrate responsible practices into their operations and take action on sustainability issues. The discussion was informed by the findings of the UN Global Compact CEO Study 2013 conducted with Accenture. Participants explored how to strengthen the most impactful drivers of corporate sustainability in order to advance business goals and maximize the business contribution to sustainable development. See page 16.

Building Blocks: Executive Sessions

In smaller break-out groups, participants focused

UNITED NATIONS PRIVATE SECTOR FORUM: AFRICA

Since 2008, UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon has convened a Private Sector Forum during the opening session of the General Assembly. This year's Forum was organized as the high-level luncheon of the Leaders Summit – focusing on the role of the private sector in the post-2015 development agenda, with an emphasis on unique opportunities and challenges in Africa. During the UN Private Sector Forum, chief executives, Heads of State/Government, and heads of UN and civil society organizations engaged in high-level roundtable discussions focused on four themes: Employment and Inclusive Growth, Education, Women's Empowerment, and Innovative and Sustainable Finance. See page 36.

on components of the Architecture believed to hold special promise for scale, collaboration and impact. Executive Sessions focused on six areas: Collective Action and Global Issue Platforms; UN-Business Partnerships; Business Sector Initiatives; Local Sustainability Movements; Private Sustainability Finance; and a forward-looking session on the business enterprise in 2100. See page 22.

Architects of a Better World: Closing Plenary

The Closing Plenary called on a new coalition of Architects of a Better World – beginning a process of engaging companies and key stakeholders in the Architecture. Panelists presented new issue platforms – on peace, education and sustainable agriculture – and a corporate sustainability programme for Boards of Directors. The Global Compact, together with the World Business Council for Sustainable Development and (WBCSD) and the Global Reporting Initiative (GRI), invited all organizations to join forces to strengthen and implement the Architecture. UN Deputy Secretary-General Jan Eliasson provided closing remarks and urged business to actively engage in shaping and implementing the post-2015 agenda. See page 26.

Action Fair Learn. Connect. Collaborate.

Held over the two days of the Leaders Summit, the Action Fair provided a collaborative space for participants to explore, navigate and commit to key actions and partnerships to address global sustainable development priorities. The Action Fair featured innovative tools and resources and facilitated “meet-ups” to encourage networking and collaboration. See page 34.

THURSDAY, 19 SEPTEMBER

Leaders Dinner

Ahead of the Leaders Summit official opening, the Leaders Dinner was held at the Museum of Modern Art (MoMA) to provide an opportunity for participants to network with the Global Compact community. As part of the reception-style dinner, the museum's world-class galleries were open exclusively for guests. See page 38.

Special Events

More than 30 special events were convened throughout the day by the Global Compact and other organizations. Events covered a wide range of corporate sustainability topics, including climate, water, sustainable agriculture, peace, gender equality, children's rights, education, impact investing, state-owned enterprises and UN-business partnerships, among many others. See page 40.

EVENT SUSTAINABILITY

The Global Compact, in cooperation with sustainability experts at event management company MCI, implemented a comprehensive sustainable event strategy to improve the delegate experience and to address the environmental, social and economic impacts of the Leaders Summit. Key highlights included:

1. A PAPER-SMART EVENT

The Leaders Summit limited printed materials such as publications, background materials, agendas, and instead relied on a customized mobile application.

2. SUSTAINABLE CONSTRUCTION

The Action Fair booths used substrates made from recycled materials and were recycled. No acrylics, vinyl or PVC were used in the event branding, and the 81m² of signage produced was made from Eco-Board and was fully recycled.

3. REDUCED WASTE

An estimated 15.6 tons of waste was produced as a result of the Leaders Summit. 20 percent of waste was diverted away from landfill. Waste management strategies included the use of reusable materials for the stage set, elimination of bottled water, and the serving of food and beverages only using reusable glass, crockery or cutlery.

4. SUSTAINABLE FOOD

A focus was placed on offering food and beverage options that used a healthy combination of fresh, local, organic, sustainable and seasonal ingredients. Out of the 8,600 food services, approximately 40 percent at the Leaders Summit venue and 90 percent at the Leaders Dinner venue were sourced from farms within 100 miles. 35 percent of the food served was vegetarian and approximately 20 percent was organic.

5. PROCUREMENT

Over 50 percent of supplier contracts included sustainability clauses. Increased performance could have been realized if the venue contract had included stricter requirements for recycling and reporting.

6. EMISSIONS

Total emissions for the event were 1,931 tons of carbon dioxide equivalents tCO². As with most international events, the biggest emissions impact (95 percent) resulted from air transport of conference delegates, while public transport, waste and energy use at the venue only contributed a relatively small share of the overall emissions.

7. OFFSETTING

205 participants elected to voluntarily offset their travel emissions. Consequently 307.5 tCO² of carbon credits were purchased in the Carbon for Water project, a partnership between Vestergaard Frandsen and ClimateCare. Carbon for Water uses carbon financing to sustainably provide 4.5 million people in Kenya with the ability to purify water in their homes via the LifeStraw[®] system – avoiding the need to burn fuel from unsustainable sources that contribute to greenhouse gas emissions. This award winning project is certified to the Gold Standard for Verified Emission Reductions.

100 percent of the Leader Summit's electricity footprint, including event preparations, power usage at the Grand Hyatt New York and electricity used at social events were offset through the purchase of Gold Standard premium quality renewable energy projects by UN partner WindMade.

A customized Leaders Summit mobile application provided attendees with up-to-the-minute information regarding agendas, speakers, venues and more. Participants also used the app to connect with other attendees, interact during sessions, explore exhibitors and access relevant publications and resources.

UNVEILING THE VISION: OPENING PLENARY

The UN Global Compact Leaders Summit 2013 began with an Opening Plenary that set the stage for the event to explore how business can shape and advance sustainable development beyond 2015 and marked the launch of the Business Engagement Architecture. The session began with an opening video designed to inspire Leaders Summit participants first as individuals and human beings, as well as business executives. The video incorporated both historical leaders of change and presented a vision towards the future we hope to achieve if people come together on critical priorities.

Tererai Trent, Founder of Tinogona, embodied this spirit of hope, possibility and the power to realize change through action. She shared her personal story of overcoming fundamental barriers – poverty, gender discrimination and education – to achieve her goals and ultimately work to make a positive impact in her community and beyond. Gender equality and education are fundamental to progress. Ms. Trent has seen this first-hand growing up and now in her efforts to uplift communities that continue to suffer from lack of inclusion, prosperity and opportunity. The message was clear: individual action can turn into collective movements – and achieve changes never thought possible. Ms. Trent called on participants to take action as individuals, as well as in their companies, to unlock the potential of the developing world and work towards a more sustainable and equitable world.

UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon welcomed the diverse group of leaders from business, civil society and Government. He underscored the importance of collaboration and highlighted the significant progress made towards eradicating poverty and disease as evidence of what can be achieved. He noted, however, that inequality persists and can only be overcome if all stakeholders act together. The Secretary-General stressed the key role of the Global Compact in helping business to become a key partner of the UN and recognized the initiative's growth to 8,000 participating companies and 4,000 civil society signatories in 145 countries, as well as its 101 country networks. The Secretary-General announced that three new Global Compact issue platforms – on Education, Business for Peace and Sustainable Agriculture – would be launched at the Leaders Summit and recognized existing initiatives – Caring for Climate and the Women's Empowerment Principles – as the world's largest business action platforms in their fields.

Tererai Trent, Founder, Tinogona

Master of Ceremonies: Lord Michael Hastings, Global Head of Citizenship and Diversity, KPMG

H.E. Ban Ki-moon, Secretary-General, United Nations

The Secretary-General noted the importance of business in accelerating the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and emphasized that business should play an even more integral role in shaping and implementing the post-2015 development agenda. The Secretary-General unveiled the Business Engagement Architecture to scale up corporate sustainability and align business with sustainable development priorities. He welcomed the support of WBCSD and GRI for the Architecture, which invites corporate leaders to collaborate and co-invest to share risks and realize opportunities. The Secretary-General called on each participant to be an architect of a better world and respond to the urgency of our global challenges.

Amina Mohammed, the Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Post-2015 Development Planning, John Ruggie, Berthold Beitz Professor in Human Rights and International Affairs at the Harvard Kennedy School of Government, and Georg Kell, Executive Director of the Global Compact, presented elements of the Architecture. While Government must create an enabling environment for the realization of the post-2015 agenda, there is a key role for business in implementation and the Architecture provides the platform. It will allow business to not only scale corporate sustainability efforts and practices, but also to spread them to others through their relationships and by setting positive examples. The UN is increasing efforts to create more space for business to engage in the post-2015 agenda, and the Architecture has potential to help strengthen global governance systems as challenges ranging from the environment to financial markets continue to span borders.

The Architecture is closely connected with the universal principles advanced by the Global Compact and links UN goals directly with long-term business goals. Examples of the Architecture's platforms for action and partnership include the Global Compact's 101 Local Networks, issue platforms and new technology-powered Business Partnership Hub. Key drivers of corporate sustainability – for example investors engaged with the Principles for Responsible Investment (PRI) and academics in the Principles for Responsible Management Education (PRME) – and the Architecture's emphasis on transparency and public commitments were also highlighted.

Panelists: Amina Mohammed, Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Post-2015 Development Planning, United Nations ; John Ruggie, Berthold Beitz Professor in Human Rights and International Affairs, Harvard Kennedy School of Government; Georg Kell, Executive Director, UN Global Compact

UNVEILING THE VISION: INTERACTIVE CEO PANEL

During the Interactive CEO Panel, participants considered the moral and material imperatives to move corporate sustainability from individual projects and programmes to the heart of business. The discussion was informed by the findings from the UN Global Compact CEO Study 2013 conducted with Accenture. Following a panel discussion among five leading CEOs from around the world, participants in the audience engaged in roundtable discussions. Representatives of labour, the investor community and civil society also provided their perspectives.

Presenting the CEO Study

The UN Global Compact CEO Study 2013 conducted with Accenture features the perspectives of over 1,000 chief executives on what is needed for corporate sustainability to have a transformative impact on markets and societies. The study has been conducted every three years since 2007 and the third edition launched at the Leaders Summit continues to demonstrate broadening awareness on the part of global business of the opportunities presented by sustainability. Amid evidence that CEOs are strongly committed to embedding sustainability throughout their organizations, the vast majority now call for action to incentivize and reward sustainability leaders and unlock the full potential of the private sector. According to the study, more than two thirds of chief executives — 67 percent — believe that business is not doing enough to address global sustainability challenges. The Architecture presents a way forward to drive and scale up corporate sustainability actions that CEOs are calling for.

Aligning the Values of Business and Society in the Long-Term

For more than a decade, the Global Compact has played an important role in mainstreaming universal prin-principles into the strategies and operations of businesses around the world. The initiative's growth to over 8,000 business participants demonstrates that an increasing number of companies are integrating sustainability. Panelists stressed that the world must go even further. Instead of changing programmes and companies alone, there needs to be a greater transition of the system in which the world operates to better align with universal values and a long-term perspective.

Participants agreed that business and society are interdependent, and sustainable development priorities are closely linked with long-term business goals. Business is in fact working for all of society — generating material wealth as well as positive and negative impacts on people and the environment. Understanding this perspective encourages business to prioritize long-term rather than short-term gains. In order to successfully manage a business, leaders must think beyond the next one or two quarters, and it is impossible to do so without considering sustainability. The importance of engaging youth in sustainability — as well as the number of youth that want to advance sustainability — was emphasized.

Driving Sustainability Performance

As presented in the Architecture, a number of society-based and market-based drivers are motivating more and more companies to take action that advances sustainable development, continuously strengthening the “business case” for corporate sustainability.

The call for more corporate sustainability leaders was made yet again, and the bar for sustainability performance is being set higher and higher. Companies who truly integrate sustainability have the ability to tackle enormous global challenges — poverty, food security and disease among others — in ways that pilot programmes and philanthropy cannot. A small number of companies make up an overwhelming proportion of the global economy, and if those companies embrace sustainable development, much can be achieved. Leaders also have the opportunity leverage data about corporate sustainability to make the case both internally and externally. Measuring and collecting data on sustainability outcomes is critical to improving performance.

Employees and labour groups are demanding decent jobs and fair wages as well as a greater sense of purpose at work. As the world works to add 600 million jobs in the next ten years, it will be critical to reduce the number of vulnerable jobs and youth unemployment. Challenges such as extremely low wages and dangerous working conditions were also highlighted this year by the tragedy at Rana Plaza in Bangladesh, driving business to address sustainability in global supply chains. Companies can also better engage their employees by aligning the companies' values with their personal goals to positively impact the world.

Consumers and citizens have an enormous opportunity to make their voices heard and accelerate the pace of change. Companies must listen. Around the world, recent social movements and regime changes have been driven by citizen movements. How companies design and develop products and services, and communicate this to consumers, are sure to be critical questions in the coming era.

Investors are driving companies to take a long-term perspective, which closely links both profitability and social good. Like companies, investors also have access to an unprecedented amount of data and they are requesting more information on how investee companies are managing environmental, social and governance risks. At the same time, patient capital investments, especially in entrepreneurs or in the poor, take on more risk but can have greater rewards in the long run.

Civil society plays an important role in shedding light on critical issues and collaborating with business to address them. Panelists emphasized gender equality as a key element of sustainable development. Civil society also works with business to address other broad challenges including climate, water, food, children's rights, decent jobs and education. Finally, Africa was highlighted as a region where implementing responsible business practices is more critical than ever for achieving long-term growth.

PANELIST QUOTES

Robert Collymore
Chief Executive Officer,
Safaricom Limited

"The youth actually understand the problem but they don't have a voice. We're not engaging with them...We need to educate them, we need to employ them and we need to empower them. If we can do that, they will figure out where they want to take the world."

Fu Chengyu
Chairman, Sinopec Group

"All businesses are facing the challenge, common challenges like climate issues, environmental issues, inefficient consumption of energy and resources. So actually we are consuming the future generation's resources, not just our own. We need to come to a clear understanding of how we can generate a better tomorrow for our future generations."

Jacqueline Novogratz
Chief Executive Officer,
Acumen Fund

"Philanthropy should be the greatest risk capital that we have, and ironically, it's often where we take the least amount of risk. So if we could invest it in those entrepreneurs that dare to go into those areas where both markets and Governments have traditionally failed the poor – and understand who they are through experimenting and failing and building market-driven solutions that will never scale without the corporates, without government, without civil society – then in the long-term, we can see real results."

Paul Polman
Chief Executive Officer, Unilever

"The purpose of business is not to make profit. That is not why business was invented. Sure, they need profit to exist, but the purpose of business is to serve a bigger common good. If you do that well, you'll do well as a business as well."

Güler Sabanci
Chairperson, Sabanci

"How can you meet the requirements of the present without engaging half of the population, disregarding 50 percent of the people in the world? It's been said it's 1.3 billion people living in poverty in the world and it's obvious that 70 percent of it is women. There are so many numbers, so many studies, but I believe, I am very optimistic about the fact that we are at a tipping point on this issue."

Dov Seidman
Founder and Chief Executive Officer, LRN

"The path ahead must be about the operating system, the human operating system.

Scaling sustainable values by doing the hard work of translating these values in corporate practices, principles—individual and leadership behaviours that animate how a company or organization operates and relates to society. We can do this."

Sander van't Noordende
Group Chief Executive,
Accenture

"We need more transformational leaders, businesses that lead the way in sustainability. We have looked in the study; those businesses that combine high business performance, in the traditional sense of the word, with high performance on sustainability, they see sustainability as an opportunity."

STAKEHOLDER RESPONSES

Philip Jennings

*General Secretary, UNI
Global Union*

"The workers of this world need a pay raise. We need to see distribution of justice. Work is meant to lift you out of poverty, not keep you in it. What we are seeing is not sustainable."

Erika Karp

Chief Executive Officer, Cornerstone Capital Inc.

"And so what I call upon executives and leaders and boards to do is change your business models. Bring a level of unprecedented collaboration. Bring a level of understanding. Bring a level of questioning that has never been seen that we can bring into the investment process."

Pierre Sané

*President, Imagine Africa
International*

"Only a genuine partnership between socially responsible businesses, democratically elected Governments and ethically-driven social movements can create the conditions for sustainable growth and social justice in Africa. Africa needs business leaders who understand this fragility and are aware of the past, but can still embrace the enormous potential the continent can offer."

PARTICIPANTS SPEAK OUT

During the session, participants engaged in roundtable discussions in response to several questions developed by the CEO panelists. The panelists circulated the room to help facilitate discussion and participants were encouraged to also share thoughts through the event's mobile application.

Young people are not just the future but they are also the present. Engage, involve and include them in decision-making, especially on matters that affect them.

@Collymore: We need to make better use of social media and mobile technology to support and empower entrepreneurs harnessing business for social impact.

Common values and shared beliefs are central to the achievement of the goals for sustainable development.

@Chairman Fu: Inspired by your comment that employees work not just for their company, but for society. How do we help employees internalize that mindset and actualize it in their business decisions everyday?

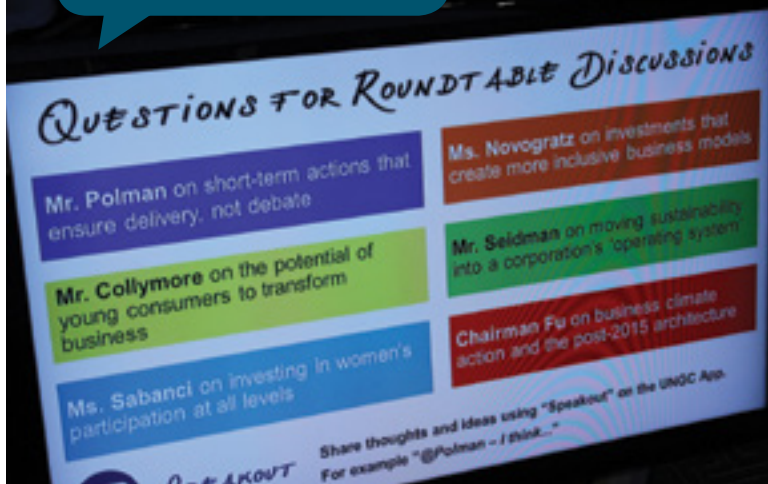

@Sabanci: It's about creating opportunities and removing barriers – conscious and unconscious.

@Seidman: Clear communication of performance benefits from sustainability and tie target metrics to employee incentive programmes.

@Polman: Partnerships between NGOs and industry leaders seem to be one way to transform our impact on the environment and society (e.g., RSP0). Shouldn't we further expand such a model to address the key sustainability challenges?

@Novogratz: We need democratic, transparent and open institutions. We also need incentives and private-public partnerships committed to a set of clear values and principles.

The Post-2015 Business Engagement Architecture represents a genuine step forward in multi-stakeholder modes of international development.

BUILDING BLOCKS: EXECUTIVE SESSIONS

In smaller break-out groups, participants focused on components of the Architecture that have high potential for scale, collaboration and impact. During these highly interactive, world café-style sessions participants discussed key challenges and opportunities for leveraging each mechanism to advance global priorities.

The Executive Sessions focused on the following six areas:

Collective Action and Global Issue Platforms

Participants discussed major business-oriented initiatives that are aligned to specific global challenges and how these efforts can deliver even more impact in the future, both individually and via collaboration. Discussions were centred on global priority issues areas. Participants indicated that Global Issue Platforms should place a greater emphasis on facilitating action among participants and stakeholders. Further, the importance of profiling good practices in terms of innovative policies, standards, technologies, services and products was underscored as a critical motivator for triggering systemic change.

Speakers: Irina Bokova, Director-General, UNESCO; Christiana Figueres, Executive Secretary, UNFCCC; Robert Greenhill, Managing Director and Chief Business Executive, World Economic Forum; Paul Hohnen, Independent Consultant on Global Sustainable Development Issues, Sustainability Strategies; Peter Solmssen, Member of the Managing Board and General Counsel, Siemens AG

UN-Business Partnerships

This session identified how business actors and other stakeholders can more effectively partner with UN entities in the post-2015 era across global priorities and themes — in order to achieve transformational impact. On both sides, the capacity and willingness to partner has grown substantially over the past decade. Today there are many entities throughout the UN system that have the capability to partner, and comprehend business and market realities. On the business side, there has been a shift from cheque-giving partnerships to harnessing core business expertise. Three buckets of UN-Business partnerships which, with greater scale, could have the most positive impact were identified: delivering products and services, advocacy and trust building, and creating a more rigorous enabling environment.

Speakers: Helen Clark, Administrator, UNDP; Marcin Korolec, Minister of the Environment, Government of the Republic of Poland and President-designate of COP19/CMP9; Jane Nelson, Director of Corporate Social Responsibility Initiative, Harvard Kennedy School of Government; Feike Sijbesma, Chief Executive Officer, Royal DSM

Business Sector Initiatives

Business and sector initiative leaders together uncovered opportunities to increase the efficiency and efficacy of sector initiatives (especially through the supply chain) and explored opportunities for collaboration. Participants discussed the importance of building trust among stakeholders through accountability and transparency. As companies across a given sector often share the same goals and challenges, the potential for success in working together is great. Sector initiatives should also explore how they can together more comprehensively address global issue priorities.

Speakers: Aron Cramer, President and Chief Executive Officer, Business for Social Responsibility (BSR); Marie-Claire Daveu, Chief Sustainability Officer and Head of International Institutional Affairs, Kering; H.E. Nick Hækkerup, Minister for Trade and European Affairs, Denmark; Barry Parkin, Chief Sustainability Officer, MARS Incorporated; Hamadoun Touré, Secretary General, ITU

Local Sustainability Movements

Focused on how to enhance the role and contribution of structures such as Global Compact Local Networks, this session explored the strategic and tactical considerations for creating more vibrant national-local sustainability movements to widen and deepen impact, including through policy engagement. Participants highlighted that local sustainability movements in general usually arise from the needs expressed by their members. Discussions and efforts related to the design and implementation of development goals often remain with national-level government institutions. As a bottom-up process, sustainable development starts at the grassroots level where local initiatives and policies can deliver powerful leverage and will often have the most impact.

Speakers: Jo Mackness, Executive Director, Center for Responsible Business, University of California Berkeley-Haas School of Business; Atiur Rahman, Governor, Bangladesh Bank; Jorge Soto, Sustainable Development Director, Braskem S.A.

Private Sustainability Finance

Participants examined the ways that private providers of finance and capital can strategically contribute to sustainable development priorities, with a focus on scaling impact. Private providers of finance including institutional and retail portfolio investors, banking and project finance providers, insurance underwriters, foundations/philanthropic organizations, and major corporations through foreign direct investment. Focusing on how these institutions can be leveraged to meet both financial and social objectives, participants emphasized the need for financial literacy to include ESG considerations. Further, partnerships at the local level are key to cultivating innovation from the ground up. Additionally through partnerships respective knowledge, resources and capacity can be effectively leveraged.

Speakers: Flemming Borreskov, President and Founder, Catalytic Society; James Gifford, Executive Director, Principles for Responsible Investment (PRI); Leonie Schreve, Head Sustainable Lending, ING

Horizon Session: The Business Enterprise in 2100

This free-form session examined the evolving role of business in society and what new business enterprises and models might — or should — emerge in the coming decades in order to address some of the persistent trust tensions between the private sector and society at large. Anchoring the conversation on disruptive forces that could indeed change business models, participants emphasized the need for a cultural and value change, one where there is a transition from wealth maximization to social maximization. Additionally, the importance of moving away from hierarchical organizing and decision making to an approach that facilitates greater bottom-up processes was underscored, such as dialogue with employees to test new models of engagement.

Speakers: Alan VanderMolen, Vice Chairman, Edelman

ARCHITECTS OF A BETTER WORLD:

CLOSING PLENARY

The Closing Plenary looked back on the day's events and called on participants to form a new coalition of architects of a better world. It launched a process of engaging companies and key stakeholders in the Architecture — aligning business with sustainable development priorities leading up to 2015 and beyond.

A Comprehensive Menu of Issue Platforms

Issue platforms address the heart of the post-2015 development agenda. Already, the Global Compact has Caring for Climate, the Women's Empowerment Principles, CEO Water Mandate, Children's Rights and Business Principles, working groups on both Anti-Corruption and Human Rights and Labour, as well as sister initiatives, PRME and PRI, to engage business schools and investors. There are also a wide range of issue platforms outside of the Global Compact. However, the Global Compact has identified gaps and in order to present business with a comprehensive range of engagement options, the Leaders Summit marked the launch of the following:

Business for Peace

The Business for Peace platform aims to expand and deepen private sector action in support of peace — in the workplace, marketplace and local communities. The platform assists companies in implementing responsible business practices aligned with the Global Compact ten principles in conflict-affected and high-risk areas and catalyze action to advance peace. Objectives include mobilizing corporate leaders to advance peace through actions that help to build strong economies and prosperity, establish more stable and just societies, foster tolerance, and create trust and intercultural understanding.

Education

Together with UNICEF, UNESCO and the UN Special

Envoy for Global Education, the Global Compact has developed guidance for engagement by business to create education and learning opportunities for children, youth and adults. The framework helps companies identify the business case and develop engagement activities in a responsible manner.

Sustainable Agriculture Business Principles

Developed in collaboration with key civil society organizations and experts, the Sustainable Agriculture Business Principles will articulate a common understanding and agreement on the resources, ecosystem services and socio-economic impacts needed to build resilience into agricultural supply systems and the markets that they serve. The Sustainable Agriculture Business Principles will also support the objectives of relevant UN agencies by offering a basis for responsible businesses to align with the goals of the UN, providing a framework for furthering good practices, and helping to develop effective private and public sector policies and partnerships.

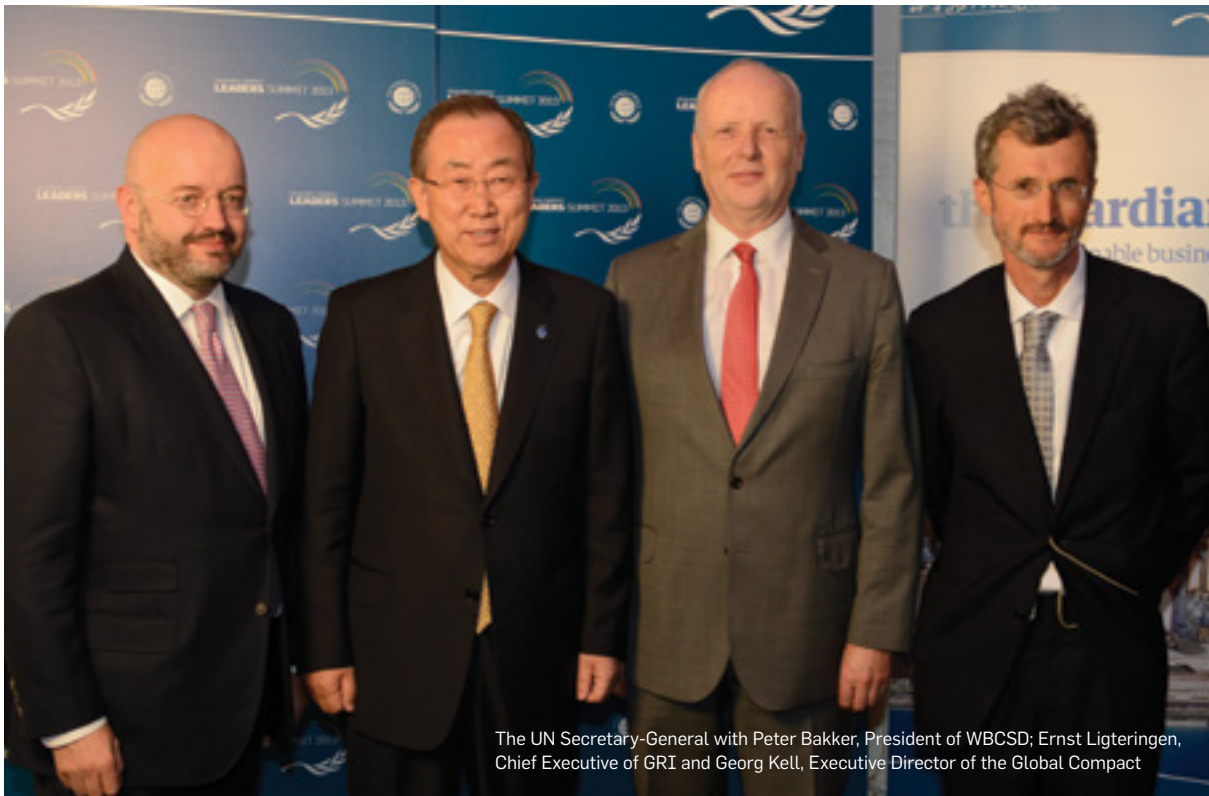

LEAD Board Programme

It was announced that five companies will pilot the LEAD Board Programme, which aims to equip Boards of Directors to more effectively oversee the implementation of corporate sustainability strategies with a view to protect and support financial value creation. By embedding sustainability into its core duties, Boards of Directors are uniquely positioned to ensure the full mainstreaming of sustainability into corporate strategies and practices. World-class experts have been selected to facilitate the Board Programme, which is designed to be delivered in-house during regular Board meetings or retreats. Guided by the experiences of the pilot phase and the example set by LEAD companies, the Board Programme is expected to be made available to all other Global Compact participants with relevant governance models in the future.

Building the Coalition

The Architecture is designed as an open invitation to organizations, initiatives and networks working globally to engage business on sustainable development. During the Closing Plenary, the Global Compact, WBCSD and GRI invited other like-minded organizations to join them in promoting and supporting the Architecture and taking actions that advance UN goals. This collaboration is based on a common understanding that i) corporate sustainability strategies must be rooted in respect for universal principles such as those advanced by the Global Compact in the areas of human rights, labour, environment and anti-corruption; ii) that companies must adopt transparent processes for communicating to their stakeholders, applying standards such as those developed by the GRI; and iii) that corporate sustainability initiatives, platforms and networks, while focused on business, should also integrally involve key stakeholder groups.

The UN Secretary-General with Peter Bakker, President of WBCSD; Ernst Ligteringen, Chief Executive of GRI and Georg Kell, Executive Director of the Global Compact

Huguette Labelle
Chair, Transparency International

"The UN Global Compact's existing global issue platforms plus the additional three new ones...facilitate engagement to advance issues, to deepen issues. They identify additional actions that we all need to learn from each other, raise awareness, facilitate collaboration and partnership, drive the scaling up which is badly needed, and of course, give us the power of working as groups, as opposed to individually."

Hon. Gordon Brown
UN Special Envoy for Global Education

"What we need now is a proper partnership...between business, Government, international agencies, charities and the foundations so that we can train the young people that we need to do the jobs that you need done; making the business case for investment in education in a way that answers your needs and responds to what is the huge demand of young people in every part of the world that they themselves should have opportunity."

Tell Hermanson
Secretary-General, ICC Sweden

"We have discussed the role of business in conflict areas now for many years, but now we're taking this a step further. And this new platform will support companies to take action, to advance peace. I'm not just talking about in the distant places. I'm talking about the market place, in the home, and in their own community, everywhere. And I think it will help companies to better manage business risk."

Sudhir Vasudeva
Chairman and Managing Director, Oil and Natural Gas Corporation (ONGC), Ltd.

"Greatest responsibility is on all of us, as business and community leaders, policy makers and policy implementers, has each one of us a role to play in ensuring that we leave this world a better place for our children than the one we inherited from our forefathers. What is good and what is right is intrinsic to our moral compass."

Waldemir Ival Loto
Chief Executive Officer, André Maggi Group

"We, business leaders, have the duty to contribute to the food security of every citizen of the planet.

However, we also have the responsibility to do so by ensuring the preservation of the ecosystems and the sustainability of our businesses."

Paolo Andrea Colombo
Chairman, Enel

"We need to be able to count on the full support from the highest level of Government and decision-makers, in addition to CEOs and CFOs who are increasingly realizing that the business case for sustainability does exist. I am convinced that this requires a more proactive engagement by the Board of Directors, especially in respect of their fiduciary role in protecting shareholder value. Board members, with their leadership, with their governance capacity, are in a unique position to make it happen."

Martha Tilaar

Chairperson, Martha Tilaar Group

"I am hopeful that [the Architecture] will help to strengthen the role of business in bringing prosperity to all, and solve some of the world's most important challenges, including in my own country, Indonesia."

Peter Bakker

President, WBCSD

"We need to rethink governance and the board programme, we need to rethink reporting, but most of all we need to learn to collaborate, to truly partner up, to avoid duplication of efforts, to really align the force. And that's where the Architecture that was launched this morning is so powerful."

Ernst Ligteringen

Chief Executive, GRI

"Partners need a common language, to communicate, to understand, to be accountable to one another, and to learn above all. Goals need measurement to be more than just lofty aspirations."

Closing Remarks

UN Deputy Secretary-General Jan Eliasson welcomed the outcomes of the Leaders Summit emphasizing that the two days have laid the foundation for a new level of business engagement with the UN. He highlighted Local Networks as the “soul and foundation” of the Global Compact and noted that they were a focal point throughout the Leaders Summit. He expressed support for the new issue platforms, progress made by existing Global Compact platforms and working groups, and the in depth analysis of Private Sustainability Finance presented at the Leaders Summit. The Deputy Secretary-General welcomed the commitments made at the UN Private Sector Forum, as well as the Global Compact’s forthcoming Africa strategy. The Deputy Secretary-General made clear that the Leaders Summit can provide important inspiration to Governments as they debate the post-2015 agenda and encouraged business to express its willingness to engage to Governments. He thanked all participants on behalf of the Secretary-General and called them to become architects — and builders — of a better world.

“Business is at the heart of improved living standards and well-being. Markets can now create and infuse ideas and foster the change that we’ll need... whatever we can do to enhance cultural diversity and tolerance so much needed in today’s world. The private sector’s involvement, trade and investment can and should be vehicles towards sustainable development, durable peace and a life of dignity for all.”

- H.E. Jan Eliasson, United Nations Deputy Secretary-General

ACTION FAIR: LEARN. CONNECT. COLLABORATE.

The Action Fair was a central meeting point for participants at the Leaders Summit to network and learn more about the various Global Compact issue initiatives and platforms. Comprised of Global Compact and Local Network exhibitions and five thematic booths, the Action Fair provided innovative tools and practical resources for learning and action across these themes as well as an opportunity for participants to connect.

JUMPSTART ACTION SESSIONS

To complement the themes and initiatives of the Action Fair, six Jumpstart Action sessions were held during lunch on 20 September to inspire business to commit and scale up action and collaboration in key areas. The topics included the Global Compact Business Partnership Hub, Global Environmental Outlook for Business, Business for Peace, Children's Rights and Business Principles, Social Enterprise and Impact Investing, and the Women's Empowerment Principles.

The UN Secretary-General added the last piece to a replica of the UN Secretariat made with LEGOs. Participants at the Action Fair were also invited to engage in mini-workshops of model building, organized by the LEGO Foundation

PARTNERSHIPS FOR SUSTAINABILITY: CITIES, STATES, CORPORATIONS

The event brought together state government and city leaders with corporations to discuss the important role that partnerships and collaboration play in addressing critical urban and regional issues. The session drew on a number of initiatives in both developed and developing markets, which include the cross-sectoral efforts of Latin American states and cities, city-wide business-led alliances in the United States, and the collaborative work of leading Latin American and European corporations. It also aimed to incentivize the creation of initiatives that bring city, state and corporate leaders together at the Local Network level.

BUSINESS FOR PEACE LAUNCH EVENT

This event introduced the new Business for Peace platform, a leadership platform which will expand and deepen private sector action in support of peace in the workplace, marketplace and local communities. Business for Peace will mobilize high-level corporate leadership to advance peace through actions at the global and local levels in order to galvanize progress and scale up positive impacts. The event spurred support and engagement from Global Compact participants; showcased good practices and examples of corporate and Local Network actions to advance peace; and highlighted public-private dialogue.

THE GLOBAL ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT OF FOOD WASTE

The event explored the profound imbalances caused by the loss or waste of a third of global food production, due to both inefficient supply chains and by consumers - in households, markets, restaurants and hotels. In addition to the human cost, the session discussed the impact of food waste on the environment, which leaves a large carbon footprint and squanders natural resources that are already at serious risk of degradation and depletion. Apart from significantly improving the overall availability of safe and nutritious food for human consumption, the session also demonstrated that reducing food waste can have a substantial positive impact on the environment.

CHILD LABOUR PLATFORM: AN INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION-GLOBAL COMPACT INITIATIVE

The event introduced the ILO-Global Compact Child Labour Platform (CLP), a cross-sectoral, membership-based forum for businesses to share learnings about tackling child labour in supply chains. With expert ILO support, the CLP will identify obstacles business faces in implementing Global Compact Principle 5 – based on the principles of the ILO Child Labour Conventions – catalyzing practical and, where appropriate, joint solutions. Panelists introduced current projects and trends in tackling child labour from a corporate sustainability perspective, followed by a roundtable discussion.

CORPORATE WATER STEWARDSHIP AND THE POST-2015 SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT AGENDA

The event advanced the CEO Water Mandate's ongoing discussions regarding water and the post-2015 development agenda and built on deliberations from the Mandate's multi-stakeholder working conference in Mumbai in March 2013. The session explored the prospective role of business in advancing policy objectives relating to increased access to water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH) services; improved water resources management and governance; efficient water use; and pollution reduction. In particular, it addressed how business can support achievement of these goals, how the goals can be framed to ensure maximum impact and alignment with emerging water stewardship practices, and how to move from goals to meaningful corporate action on the ground.

HOW CAN CORPORATIONS CREATE SOCIAL BUSINESSES TO ADDRESS PRESSING SOCIAL PROBLEMS?

This event discussed how corporations, by leveraging their core competencies, can start social businesses — created for social benefit rather than private profit — that directly impact pressing social needs. Like an NGO, social business has a social or environmental mission, but like a business, it generates revenue to cover its own costs. Investors may recoup their initial investment, but all further profits are reinvested for growth and innovation, or to seed new social business ventures.

Ensuring corporate engagement towards Sustainable Development

For the past ten years, the Brazilian Global Compact Network has been ensuring growing corporate engagement in Sustainable Development. Goals have been established, new markets have been developed and Brazilian companies are becoming increasingly more competitive, at a national as well as an international level. We have been encouraging society and the government to engage in the building of a new future.

Currently, the Brazilian Global Compact Network is composed of more than 580 organizations deeply committed to the implementation of Global Compact's 10 Principles. It is also extremely active in the Post 2015 agenda, outlined in the Letter of Commitments signed in 2012 at the Rio+20 summit by more than 230 CEOs.

The Ten Principles of the United Nations Global Compact

HUMAN RIGHTS

- Principle 1 Businesses should support and respect the protection of internationally proclaimed human rights; and Principle 2 make sure that they are not complicit in human rights abuses.

LABOUR

- Principle 3 Businesses should uphold the freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining;
Principle 4 the elimination of all forms of forced and compulsory labour;
Principle 5 the effective abolition of child labour; and Principle 6 the elimination of discrimination in respect of employment and occupation.

ENVIRONMENT

- Principle 7 Businesses should support a precautionary approach to environmental challenges;
Principle 8 undertake initiatives to promote greater environmental responsibility; and Principle 9 encourage the development and diffusion of environmentally friendly technologies.

ANTI-CORRUPTION

- Principle 10 Businesses should work against corruption in all its forms, including extortion and bribery.
