Alice is the CEO of CTG Global, a company that provides unique support to the humanitarian and development community in fragile and conflict-affected countries, specialising in the rapid mobilisation of personnel and operational support.

Taking over the company in 2007, she quickly expanded the existing operations from focusing solely on Afghanistan to include international humanitarian and development aid organisations worldwide. Today CTG are operational in 25 countries.

From the day that Alice stepped into Iraq, in 2003, she felt a certainty that she was meant to work assisting communities of fragile countries. The memorable experiences as CEO of CTG have been many: the impact that the CTG teams made in Liberia during the Ebola crisis where they ran three Ebola units. (The CTG team of Ebola fighters was included in Time magazine's 'Person of the Year' awards 2014); the positivity of the people she met when visiting Gaza; and being part of projects that help to advance sustainability in local communities such as food distribution in Sudan and monitoring in Somalia.

Alice is on the steering committee for the UN Global Compact and is proud to be an advocate for the Women's Empowerment Principles and their Business 4 Peace Programme. Her vision is for CTG to be a world leader in the provision of humanitarian and development project support in challenging environments globally.
