

MAKING GLOBAL GOALS LOCAL BUSINESS INDIA

Leonard Wahl

Leonard's interest for sustainability topics started when he focused on corporate responsibilities for human rights while doing his degree in political science. Analyzing the potential of global sustainability governance through non-financial disclosure, Leonard got convinced about the power of transparency and stakeholder scrutiny to shape the business of the future.

Consequently he began his professional career working with small and medium German enterprises on their sustainability reporting performance. He further consulted companies how to include stakeholder demands into their sustainability strategies and convened distinguished experts to advance their corporate sustainability.

Leonard turned to more international topics again when he joined Merck in 2016, a leading international science and technology company with its business sectors in healthcare, life science and performance materials. Working with Corporate Responsibility his attention today is focused on integrating the Sustainable Development Goals into Merck's business practices next to community involvement topics.
