Rishi Sher Singh is a business transformation expert with two decades of accomplishments in supply chains, manufacturing, implementation of capacity building projects, standards development & training. Rishi's journey from shop floor to an entrepreneur has provided first hand insights on business drivers of sustainability. Rishi's unique approach is a balance between technical process and people engagement. Implementation of UN Guiding Principles and SDGs (especially gender equality) in value chains are his key focus areas.

Some of Rishi's recent work include Human Rights Impact Assessment (HRIA) for a multinational company, mapping of Mica supply chain in India, enabling gender equality within factories and promoting 'Make in India'. At Hewlett Packard Company (2005-10), Rishi piloted a unique capacity building model for suppliers & contract manufacturers, which was instrumental in shaping HP's current supplier capability programme. With deep belief in social dialogue, Rishi has facilitated multi-stakeholder platforms in India (garments & electronics sector) and Bangladesh (garments).

Rishi is a master trainer, key note speaker on sustainability (in many international and local events) and a student mentor. Rishi holds an MBA in International Business from University of Birmingham.
